50 years of bringing arts to kids
Young Audiences of Oregon & SW Washington has reached the half-century mark! Since 1958, hundreds of thousands of young people have had their lives and educations enriched through the dynamic performances, residencies and workshops of Young Audiences’ dancers, musicians, muralists, ceramic artists, storytellers, drummers and poets. We connect these professional teaching artists with classroom teachers and together they use the arts to make learning come alive for their students.
The arts cultivate the whole child: mind, heart and body. Young Audiences is committed to keeping the arts at the core of learning. Our community is rich with artists who play a unique and essential role in the education of today’s young people. Each time the arts intersect with classroom teaching we witness a powerful moment in the life of a child.

Let us tell you why.
Students who participate in the arts are four times as likely to be recognized for academic achievement.
Students who studied dance score higher on measures of creative thinking, especially in the categories of fluency, originality and abstract thought.
Students who participate in the arts learn how to make decisions in situations where there are no standard answers.
The arts help all students develop more appreciation and understanding for the world around them.
Students who participate in the arts read for pleasure twice as often.
Students at risk of not completing high school cite their participation in the arts as a reason for staying in school.
The arts help students develop a sense of craftsmanship, goal-setting and pride in a job well done - all skills needed to succeed in the classroom and beyond.
This year we brought the arts to 94,768 children in over 200 schools.

With your help we can reach the remaining 245,063 children in our region.

Last year, 23,343 students in 97 schools raised $758,309 through the Run For The Arts, an annual jogathon coordinated by Young Audiences. The schools used these funds to bring artists into their classrooms, pay for field trips to see performances and exhibitions, and purchase art supplies.
Since 1958, the community has generously supported Young Audiences. This community giving is led by The Sunburst Society Patrons, each of whom is committed to sustaining our work through a gift of $1,000 or more.
